Chapter 1: Principles of Government Section 2 Lecture Notes

AMERICAN GOVERNMENT

PEARSON

- 1. Classify governments according to three sets of characteristics.
- 2. Define systems of government based on who can participate.
- 3. Identify different ways that power can be distributed, geographically, within a state.
- 4. Describe a government by the distribution of power between the executive and legislative branch.

- autocracy: government in which a single person holds all political power
- oligarchy: government in which a small, usually self-appointed group has the sole power to rule
- unitary government: a government in which all power belongs to one central agency
- federal government: a government in which power is divided between one central and several local governments

- division of powers: the split of power between central and local governments
- confederation: an alliance of independent states
- presidential government: a government with separate executive and legislative branches
- parliamentary government: a government in which the executive branch is part of the legislative branch and subject to its control

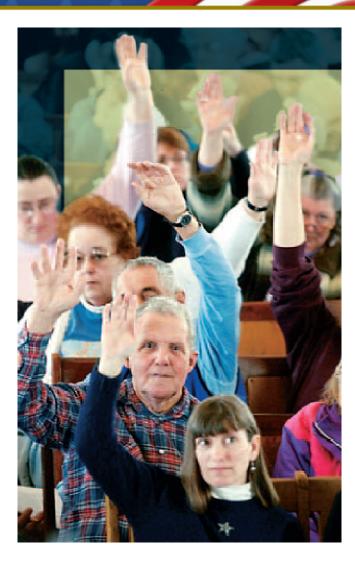

- What are some forms of government in the world today?
 - Democracies and dictatorships are classified according to who can participate in government.
 - Unitary, federal, and confederation-style governments are classified based on how power is divided geographically.
 - Presidential and parliamentary governments are defined by the relationship between the executive and legislative branches.

Direct Democracy

- In a direct or pure democracy, the people pass laws by discussing and voting on them in meetings, such as town meetings.
- This system works only in small communities.

Indirect Democracy

- In an indirect or representative democracy, the people elect agents who make and carry out the laws.
- These representatives rule with the consent of the governed and can be removed by the people at election time.

Example Democracies

- The United Kingdom is a constitutional monarchy.
- Most power lies with the Parliament, which is elected by the people.
- The queen is the head of state, while the head of government is the Prime Minister, who is the head of the leading party in Parliament.

Example Democracies, cont. GOVERNMENT

- The United States is a constitution-based federal republic.
- The President and members of Congress are chosen by the people.
- The President is both Chief of State and Head of Government.

- Checkpoint: What is the difference between an oligarchy and an autocracy?
 - In an autocracy, one person holds total political power, while in an oligarchy a small elite group shares political power.
 - Both are forms of dictatorships, holding absolute and unchallenged authority over the people, who have no say in government.

Example Dictatorships

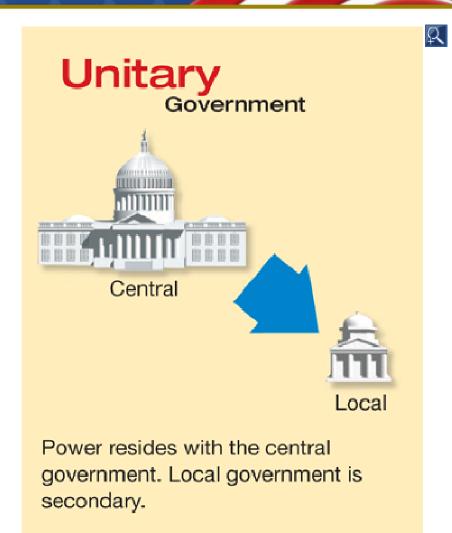

- Some dictatorships are like that of China, where people can vote only for candidates from one political party and the legislature does whatever the dictatorship says.
- Other dictatorships are like the one in Myanmar, where the military rules and there are no elections.

Unitary Government

- In a unitary model, all power belongs to the central government, which may grant some powers to local governments.
- The powers of the central government may be limited or unlimited.
- Most governments in the world are unitary in form.

Federal Government

- In the federal model, power is divided between a central government and several local governments, usually according to a constitution.
- The U.S. and some 25 other states have federal forms of government.

Confederate Government

- A confederation is an alliance of independent governments that grant limited powers, usually involving defense or foreign affairs, to a central government.
- The European Union is similar to a confederation.

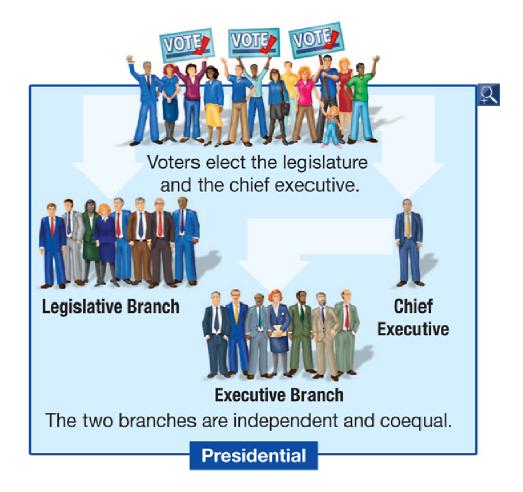

AMERIC

Most power belongs to the local (regional) governments. The central government has only limited power.

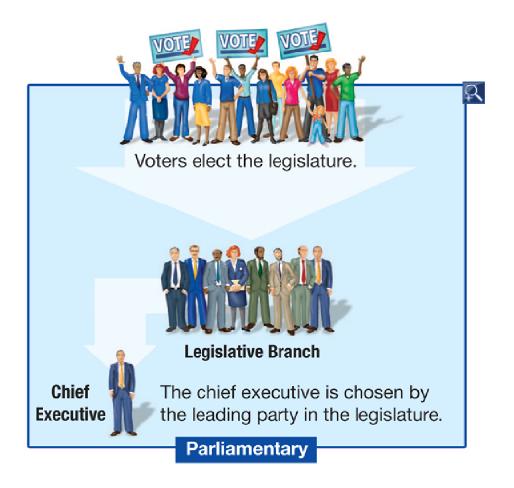

Presidential Government

- A presidential government divides executive and legislative power between two branches.
- The details of this separation of powers are spelled out in a constitution.

Parliamentary Government Government

- In a parliamentary government, the legislature chooses the executive, which is part of the legislature and under its control.
- A majority of world governments use the parliamentary system, which lacks some checks and balances but promotes cooperation between the executive and legislative branches.

- The prime minister is the head of the leading party in Parliament and chooses cabinet members from the Parliament.
- If the Parliament loses confidence in the Prime Minister and cabinet, elections are held to form a new government.

- Now that you have learned about some of the forms of government in the world today, go back and answer the Chapter Essential Question.
 - Is government necessary?
